Patsy Mink's journey began on December 6, 1927, on the Hawaiian island of Maui. Growing up in a family of Japanese immigrants, she was instilled with a strong sense of justice and a passion for education. From a young age, she recognized the inequalities that existed in society and resolved to fight for a better future.

In this captivating book, children witness Patsy's transformation from a timid young woman to a formidable advocate for change. They follow her as she earns a law degree at the University of Chicago and returns to Hawaii to practice law. It is during this time that Patsy's passion for social justice is ignited.

As Patsy becomes immersed in the complexities of the political landscape, she identifies the urgent need for equal representation and opportunities for women. In 1959, she makes history by becoming the first woman elected to the Hawaii House of Representatives.

Unmoved by the challenges and resistance she faces, Patsy continues to rise through the ranks. In 1964, she becomes the first woman of color elected to the United States Congress, representing the state of Hawaii. This groundbreaking achievement marks a historic milestone in American politics.

Throughout her illustrious career in Congress, Patsy Mink remained steadfast in her commitment to social justice and equality. She co-authored and introduced the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964, which outlawed discrimination based on race, religion, sex, or national origin.

In addition to advocating for civil rights, Patsy Mink championed women's rights and reproductive justice. She introduced the Equal Rights Amendment, which sought to guarantee equal rights under the law for all Americans regardless of sex.

Patsy Mink's unwavering perseverance and fierce advocacy left an enduring mark on American history. Her legacy continues to inspire generations of children and adults alike.
