

Force Benedict: Extraordinary Lives, Extraordinary Stories of World War II

Force Benedict is a beautifully illustrated book that tells the stories of 12 extraordinary people who lived through World War II. These are not the stories of generals or politicians, but of ordinary people who did extraordinary things. From a young woman who worked as a spy to a man who helped to evacuate children from war-torn London, these stories are full of courage, hope, and resilience.

The book is written by historian and author Patrick K. O'Donnell, who has spent years researching the lives of these individuals. O'Donnell's writing is clear and engaging, and he brings these stories to life with vivid detail and rich context.

The Stories

The Spy: Virginia Hall

Virginia Hall was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1906. She was a bright and adventurous young woman, and she dreamed of becoming a doctor. However, her dreams were cut short when she was diagnosed with a bone disease that left her with a permanent limp.

Undeterred, Hall decided to pursue a career in intelligence. She joined the SOE in 1941, and she was soon sent to France to work as a spy. Hall's mission was to gather intelligence on German troop movements and to help to organize resistance groups.

Hall was a skilled spy, and she quickly became one of the SOE's most valuable agents. She was able to gather a wealth of intelligence that helped the Allies to plan their invasion of Normandy. Hall also helped to organize several resistance groups, which played a vital role in the liberation of France.

Hall's work was dangerous, and she was captured by the Germans several times. However, she was always able to escape, and she continued to work as a spy until the end of the war.

After the war, Hall returned to the United States, where she continued to work for the CIA. She died in 1982, but her legacy lives on. She is remembered as one of the most courageous and successful spies of World War II.

The Rescuer: Nicholas Winton

Nicholas Winton was a British stockbroker who helped to evacuate children from war-torn London during World War II. He is known as the "British Schindler" for his work in saving the lives of over 600 children.

Nicholas Winton was born in London, England, in 1909. He was a kind and compassionate young man, and he was deeply concerned about the plight of the Jewish children who were being persecuted by the Nazis.

In 1938, Winton traveled to Prague, Czechoslovakia, to help organize the evacuation of Jewish children to England. He worked tirelessly to find homes for the children and to arrange for their safe passage to England.

Winton's work was dangerous, and he was often in danger of being arrested by the Nazis. However, he never gave up, and he continued to work until he had evacuated over 600 children from Czechoslovakia.

After the war, Winton returned to England, where he continued to work as a stockbroker. He never spoke about his work during the war, and it was not until 1988 that his story became known to the public.

Winton was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II in 2002 for his work in saving the lives of over 600 children during World War II. He died in 2015, but his legacy lives on. He is remembered as one of the greatest humanitarians of the 20th century.
